Your First Meeting...

Getting to know someone new can be awkward, that's why we've provided you with the "Getting to Know You" Questionnaire and the conversation cards. You should leave your first meeting with a better understanding of who each other is and what they are expecting for your new mentor/student relationship! Take the time to ask about family, friends, faith, work, school, and pets... anything you think is important.

This meeting and possibly a few after should be considered building blocks. You are working towards a relationship that is transparent, and built on trust and understanding. Rome was not built in a day, and neither is a good friendship.

Being a mentor is intentional, but not obvious. You're their friend, confidant, and role model, not their mother. Allow your student to live and share openly with you, and lead by example.
